

Eau-de-Vie

Often referred to as Australia's Original "Modern Day Speakeasy", Eau-de-Vie harks back to the final years of what has become known as the "Golden Age of the Cocktail": 1920s America. Gents and dames danced their worries away into the early morning, the cocktail was an unparalleled icon, and the illegal, secret, and hidden drinking dens were known as Speakeasys.

Our list pays homage to some of the characters you may have encountered had you been a bar fly during the Prohibition era.

CHARLES R. WALGREEN founded Walgreen's pharmacy in 1901 and by the time Prohibition hit in 1920 had around 20 stores. Luck shone on Walgreen's with Section 6 of the Volstead Act allowing the purchase of liquor for medical purpose. By 1929 Walgreen's had over 525 outlets. Walgreen himself denies that the growth had anything to do with whiskey, but things like "a superb management team" and an "exceedingly high-quality service". We think it was more the "exceedingly high ABV" of his product.
